Foreword

Although the upper Tenth Ward, from which this school draws its pupils, is little more than two decades old, it had its Hanford Landing on the Genesee and one of the mills which helped make Rochester the "Flour City." It shares with all of the nation the heritage of American democracy, and it has its own blend of supposedly discordant and incompatible nationalities from the Old World.

Significant as may be the traditions in which the Tenth Ward finds its roots, however, the present is more than the sum of its historical elements. It is in 1942 a community of 30,000 souls, mainly of British, Dutch, and German ancestry, with a dash of Italian. Few families are extremely rich, and few are desperately poor. Many gain their livelihood directly or indirectly from the manufacture of photographic and optical goods, produced with incredible purity and precision.

The Tenth Ward of the now "Flower City" lives very much under the spell of Nature. Parks and tennis courts extend for more than a mile along the Genesee River, parkways are numerous, and rows of elm trees on several of the older streets form the stately naves of outdoor Gothic cathedrals.

The Tenth Ward lives close to Nature in a still more elemental sense than most densely populated urban areas. Fruit farms and market garden areas crowd in on the west and northwest, contributing many pupils to the high school and much business to merchants of the Tenth Ward. Hundreds of industrial workers live in new developments along Ridge Road West and the Big Ridge. The influences of Lake Ontario, a few miles north, are an important factor in the environment.

Churches are numerous and well supported in the Tenth Ward. Social activities and clubs of all kinds flourish. Political organizations are active. A community newspaper, the "Tenth Ward Courier," fosters neighborhood unity.

Mild, tolerant, sympathetic, and leisurely are the inhabitants of the Tenth Ward. Modesty is admired and aggressiveness discouraged. Formality—genial, friendly formality—is preferred, and conservatism is deeply rooted. The temperament of the Tenth Ward is a blend of Dutch solidity, German loyalty and patience, British mild-ness, and Canadian calmness. Something of the flavor of Merrie Englands pervades the atmosphere.

In John Marshall High School, perhaps more than in any other nerve center in the area, are concentrated the dreams, hopes, and resolves of the future. "The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts" and the seniors particularly have their eyes fixed on the days ahead. "What is our part in the fortunes of war, the achievements of peace, and the continuation of democracy?" they wondered as the months elapsed, "and what is our part in that finer world which has been the elusive dream of the centuries?"

The future is supremely important. Yet, because it is to a large extent the projection of past and present, the editors have found themselves this year embracing a broader perspective than ever before. It is stated in a proposition which underlies the planning of this book: THE PROMISE OF THE FUTURE GROWS OUT OF THE TRADITIONS OF THE PAST AND THE REALITIES OF THE PRESENT; BOTH CONSTRUCTIVE AND RECREATIONAL.

It is the aim of the editors to provide a few colorful hints of the background as well as a portrayal of the present with its many implications for the future.

"THOU WERT MY GUIDE . . .

Mr. Snyder, with so great a responsibility as the guidance of a student body of 1500, must often feel some degree of sympathy and understanding for the legendary Atlas, who supported the world on his shoulders. Behind every well organized and smoothly-running school stands an executive whose days are filled with many wise decisions of inspired leadership.

He eagerly encourages cooperation and self-government in the student body; but upon its ability to take responsibility and show initiative depend its privileges.

Yet a forward-looking school must relate itself to the problems of its time. "Defense" influenced the school program through a decided trend toward vocational training, with two outside training courses held at Marshall. Fresh emphasis on the importance of nutrition for health marked the year's events. This was effectively put into practice by the school cafeteria's offering a specially balanced luncheon for ten cents.

Probably Mr. Snyder's outstanding responsibility for the year 1942 was the evaluating study made by a commission from the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, under his supervision. Its purpose was to determine the effectiveness of this school in terms of its objectives, and the means by which it may improve.

MRS. EDWARD P. SPENCER

PHILOSOPHER . . . and FRIEND"

Mrs. Spencer, the "guiding light" for sophomore, junior and senior girls . . . worked with the Girls' Service Organization toward greater service to the school and community in war time. In her office was also centralized the social program of the entire school. Dances, banquets, part-time jobs, planning a schedule with each girl—all formed the daily routine of her office. She finished up her year's work by advice to senior girls about their plans for the future, including colleges and jobs.

Miss Champney, eighth and ninth grade girls' adviser, handled many tasks, all more important than routine guidance work. There are three phases: educational, including program planning; vocational, aiding in determining job interest and adaptabilities of pupils; and social, comprising group parties, clubs, and individual social adjustment. This guidance began with her spring visit to the contributing elementary schools and continued throughout the school year. Her chief responsibility was helping individuals become adjusted to a new organization and to each other.

MISS DOROTHY CHAMPNEY

Mr. Burt, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grade boys adviser as well as vice-principal, was one of the busiest men in Marshall. Besides handling his regular duties, he sometimes had to pinch-hit for Mr. Snyder. The first part of the year was spent remapping schedules. He attended the conference of deans and the Secondary School Conference to learn the latest ideas on school policies. As the end of the year approached, he started discussions with seniors about colleges and professions after leaving high school.

Mr. Wishart, eighth and ninth grade boys' adviser had a full schedule. Along with his regular duties, such as checking attendance, arranging schedules, and planning high school programs, he edited the proceedings of the fifteenth annual meeting of the State Deans' Association. With Miss Champney he acted as an adviser to the Junior House and also served on the scholarship committee. He also attended meetings of the Rochester Teachers' Association as one of the three representatives from John Marshall.

"COMMON IN GOAL...

Many years ago in the semi-dark ages of 1915, Kodak High School was born, the offspring of Kodak Grammar School and the namesake of Kodak Park. Through 27 years of the high school's history, the factory and school have been the most congenial neighbors.

In 1926 Kodak Park displayed its good sportsmanship by not feeling slighted when the name of the high school was changed to John Marshall. Their intimacy continued, and Kodak's eight o'clock morning whistle served as an ever-present alarm for lucky students living within a few minutes' walk of Marshall. This same whistle called over at twelve and again at one o'clock each day.

Besides letting Marshall use its tennis courts, Kodak's two friendly chimneys have been landmarks for lost eighth graders knowing that Marshall lies somewhere in a radius of a few blocks.

A large percentage of students' parents are employed at Kodak. In the course of time, hundreds of Marshall graduates have found employment there and in other Rochester industries. They find the highest working standards. They find recreational and athletic organizations, musical clubs, and various kinds of entertainment for their employees.

Marshall and Rochester industries like Kodak have the same perfect-score policy. Their goals are 100 per cent in workmanship and in campaigns. Marshall has endeavored to train students in a 100-per-cent manner, and industry expects the same almost perfect work from them.

UNDAUNTED...

Church spires and factory smokestacks alone rival in height the far-famed tower of John Marshall. Wesley Methodist is to the north. To the south is Sacred Heart; to the south-east is the Second Church of Christ, Scientist; while on the west is the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer. Also punctuating the skyline are the spires of Grace Methodist, Dewey Avenue Presbyterian, Holy Rosary, and the Church of the Ascension. Snugly nestled among the spires are the homes of the Tenth Warders.

Blackened smokestacks of the neighboring factories daily pour forth dense clouds of smoke. They typify the large volume of production undertaken by the manufacturing plants and the small independent merchants who give employment to the people of this community. Large and small, they are all doing their part in this great war struggle.

Marshall's tower is and will be a focal point in the surrounding area. From it radiate abstract knowledge and practical skills of many kinds in ever widening circles of outreach.

BOUND IN FRIENDSHIP"

"Hello there, Mr. Johnson! May I help you?"

"Democrat? Twenty-eight cents, please."

"Shall I fill 'er up, sir?"

"Joe Marshallite" is an asset to the community. He clerks in that store across the street, totes the morning paper, and owns a gas station in the next block.

"Mary Jane Marshallite" works in the bank, gets her youngsters off to high-school on time every morning, bakes bread in that bakery across the way, and is the best dress-maker for miles around.

Marshall is part of the orbit in which the life of the community revolves. Many Tenth Warders have watched the school's growth through the years and taken part in its development. Their "kiddies" have looked forward to the time when they could enter its portals.

"All roads lead to Marshall!" Community fathers and mothers spend a Sunday afternoon, now and then, at school listening to the choir blending voices in songs. Shop keepers hire high-school boys and girls during vacations. Everyone turns to Marshall News when he unfolds his Tenth Ward Courier and ears prick up when athletic results are announced over the radio.

"Alice, where is Bill tonight? Not hanging around the corner again?"

"Not tonight, dear. Bill is dancing at the Marshall Snowball. He's with June Smith, you know, Joan's daughter. School keeps him out of mischief."

College preparatory subjects, a business course, and academic classes provide the community young people with opportunities to prepare themselves for the future, for its work, its leisure, and its living. Teachers and advisers are glad to help them plan their lives.

"What can we do to help in the national emergency?" Marshall offers the answer. Her doors are thrown open at night to welcome those who wish to learn to aid in national defense.

Marshall and the community are tied together in close accord, all working together toward a common goal. Marshall is in the heart of the community and the community's heart is in Marshall.

HANFORD'S LANDING

Commencement Hymn

by MRS. EDWARD SPENCER

*Hail, John Marshall, Hail to thee!
Hail to high school years now done.
We must say farewell to thee
And to days of youthful fun.
Though the years have quickly sped,
We've made friendships warm and true;
Loyalty and truth, golden thoughts of youth,
Marshall High, we pledge to you.*

*Farewell, Marshall High, Farewell!
From thy walls we now must part;
But thy mem'ry e'er shall dwell
In one loyal student's heart;
As we leave thy hallowed halls,
Love for thee shall never die;
Comrades, e'er we part, pledge we hand and heart,
Loyalty to Marshall High!*

MARSHALL AWARDS

Awards in three major fields of endeavor are here displayed. For each minor letter, members of the Students' Association were required to earn 175 credits while a major award was given for a total of 300 credits.

The script letters represent scholarship and are presented to students on the basis of high scholastic standing. The activities award, monogrammed style, represents participation in student social affairs, while the block letter "M" denotes membership in athletic organizations.

The school award is a pin and guard given when a person has earned one major letter and two minor letters in the three fields.

MYSTERY LAIR

This year the library purchased 150 books which, with the thousands of books already in the library, kept students informed on any topic from bombers to battleships, from mathematics to morons, and from Berlin to Baltimore. Miss Grinnell often by a helpful suggestion saved pupils the labor of searching through stacks of books, while Miss Jardine assisted her in administering aid to book-conscious Marshallites.

"THE MEN OF CULTURE ARE . . .

Beginning with the eighth grade, the social studies department offered varied topics. The romance and color of America's past was first introduced in social studies 8, a required course that placed special emphasis on WHAT happened rather than WHY. It portrayed the joys, sufferings, and hardships of the pioneers.

Social studies 9, a required subject, began with a study of the family group and broadened until it encompassed the world. History I, an optional topic, covered the history of man from the time of Egypt to the time of Napoleon, not only politically, but also culturally.

History II completed this study from Napoleon to World War II. Here were discussed problems which are generally blamed for the present strife.

Required in either the eleventh or twelfth grade, History III could be studied as a Regent's subject. Such incidents as Bill of Rights Week, the attack by Japan, and the ensuing declaration of war put the study on a practical, debatable basis.

In the eleventh and twelfth grade modernized studies of problems of democracy and economics were offered as a year course, and students had a choice of units to study. They were taught to face the problems discussed as adult thinkers. Much emphasis was placed on current events.

Opportunity for further study of cultural problems was offered by the Foreign Relations Group under the leadership of Mr. Fotch. Debates, movies, and a large assortment of books and magazines led to interesting meetings.

The social studies courses aimed to teach the student how to be a good citizen, and to make him want to be a good citizen. They gave him a full understanding of his duties as such, if democracy is to succeed.

THE TRUE APOSTLES OF EQUALITY"

In the ever-widening circles of life what is more important than an intelligent command of the English language? This importance is the reason why English is basic in school life. Therefore, English plays a dual role—a school subject and also a social necessity for the development of a high cultural standard.

Through their study of English, students extended their experience and improved their speed in reading and writing. They sought to acquire an individual style in speaking and writing and to comprehend their reading more intelligently. More stress was laid on these points than on grammar work, though emphasis was still placed on correct grammar.

One major idea behind all assembly programs was to bring about a more extensive knowledge of English. Radio programs, speakers, motion pictures, dramatic skits, and international relations programs contributed to this plan of the English department.

Different types of books and periodicals were read and studied by each English class with the purpose of greater enjoyment of reading. Famous plays, novels, and works of the great poets formed another important project of these classes. It was noted that today, compared with ten years ago, the circulation of the high-school library material has greatly increased.

Speech was another important field. Round table discussions, panel discussions, recordings, and individual speech work formed an active part in this all-important field of English.

Elective courses connected with English were the radio class and the journalism class. Script writing, sound effects, actual broadcasting, and speech work were given consideration in the JMHS Radio Workshop. The journalism class studied reporting, news writing and editing. Members of the class wrote most of the material used in the school paper and by the press bureau.

Recordings of plays, stories, and poetry owned by the Board of Education made English a more interesting subject to students. Radio programs of special significance were brought to the pupils by means of the public address system.

A social studies class under the direction of Mr. Eike is reading current affairs magazines. In present times more and more emphasis is placed upon the interpretation of the news.

"ENDOWED with the PRINCIPLES to PONDER"

To teach addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division was the work of the mathematics department. These were and are the fundamental processes on which our complex civilization is based; so to obtain a knowledge of them was advantageous to many students. The math department tried to give pupils as much practical knowledge as possible.

The task of reaching this goal began in the eighth grade. Here mathematics 8 was introduced to the 250 pupils of this year's classes. They reviewed fundamental arithmetic and learned some of the main principles of algebra—"the shorthand of mathematics."

During this time ninth grade pupils were concentrating on fundamental algebra. Many tenth year students studied plane geometry to learn the nature of proof, and of concentration. This subject was one which was carried out to other classes, to the home, and to outside work for practical application.

Juniors studied intermediate algebra. This, like plane geometry, was a Regent's class.

Twelfth year students of high caliber, 53 in all, were allowed to study trigonometry, advanced algebra, and solid geometry. A few members of other classes were also allowed to take them, departing from the usual order of the math sequence.

"Trig" was a study of the completion of the solution of the oblique triangle and of trigonometric functions. Advanced algebra dealt with still more advanced topics of algebra and introduced calculus. The three dimensions, length, width, and breadth—received special attention in solid geometry classes.

Practical applications of such mathematical teaching were many and varied. Students were expected to learn to reason clearly, to have better powers of analysis, and to be able to generalize and discriminate. In any field, they were expected to apply what they had been taught.

Class projects such as measuring the athletic field, building crude transits, using various measuring instruments and slide rules, were undertaken. These projects enabled them to put to practical use the knowledge gained in their mathematics classes.

INTO A WORLD UNKNOWN

Nine teachers and 1200 students kept the mysteries of science alive in eight different subjects. Science 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, biology, physics, and chemistry were the subjects taught.

Why a ping-pong ball can defy gravity without any visible means of support save a steady column of air from a compressed air system, was one of the many problems delved into by physics students. What is  $H_2O_4$  was a problem solved in the lighter moments of a chemistry class, while valence was a mystery conquered in the more serious moments.

Over-interest in fish caused a metal screening to be placed on the aquaria in the biology rooms. What the inside of a frog looks like was one of the questions investigated by interested biology students after school.

Freshmen solved the mystery of what makes things burn by mixing manganese dioxide and potassium chlorate to get oxygen. A glowing splinter of wood did the rest. What made water come through the faucet and where it came from was a mystery deciphered by the sub-freshmen studying the Rochester water system.

Science 10, 11, and 12 were non-regent's classes in biology, physics, and chemistry, respectively.

KEYS KEYED PATHS TO SPEED

Business hath many mysteries—at least that's what they say—but in John Marshall the ten teachers of this subject overcame them to everyone's satisfaction. General business I, II, and 10; shorthand I and II; bookkeeping I and II; typing I, II, and 10, and special; economic geography; retail distribution; office practice; and business law were 1941-2 subdivisions of the general heading, business.

Probably the beginning typing student could write an interesting thriller entitled "The Mystery of the Black Key." This book could tell how Sherlock Holmes, alias the teacher, solved the mystery by such simple methods as the steady use of charts and by diligent practice. When the mystery was solved, the student might, in his second year, reach the speed of fifty words per minute.

Eighth graders often wondered what the machines in room 307 were for. Beginning students sometimes wondered too. As they advanced further, they realized that these were the machines commonly found in business offices, such as posting and calculating machines, and dictaphones.

Many students who desire further secretarial practice were chosen as student secretaries. These students were assigned to teachers who gave them practical experience.

ACCENT ON RHYTHM

Nineteen-forty-one will long be recalled as the beginning of Spanish in Marshall. "Learn it with music" was the theme as snatches of "La Cucaracha" re-echoed in the building and "Quiereme Mucho," the Spanish version of the current American song, "Yours," was hummed or whistled through the halls.

Two large classes taught by Mr. Clark ordered song books. Several students tested their linguistic ability by corresponding with Spanish boys and girls. For the first time in five years, to make room for Spanish, German was not taught in Marshall. Latin was the most popular language. It accounted for nine out of the seventeen language classes. Benefits sought from studying this language were a larger vocabulary, a better acquaintance with the structure of English, and a background of Roman History. Miss Chittenden and Miss Mayo were the two Latin teachers.

French had six classes this year, taught by Miss Powers and Mr. Clark. Due to the war, student correspondence with boys and girls in France decreased considerably.

After School
German Class

Daily in room 306 a class of future stenographers, accountants, and bookkeepers met to gain knowledge and skill. In this picture may be seen a cross section of students training for their vocations. Some pupils here are practicing on a calculating machine, others are increasing their typing speed, some are filing, and a few are familiarizing themselves with dictaphones.

TAKIN' WELL-SHAKEN

Not the world, but at least the school beat a path to the office of Mrs. Rausch, school nurse. On the job every school day, she treated many ill or injured pupils. Treatment was sometimes replaced by disciplinary measures when students suffered from severe headaches preceding an examination.

The use of the thermometer and some good judgment settled the question of sending a pupil home. The immaculate office was a welcome comfort to the really sick boy or girl.

"THERE BUDS MELODIC PROMISE"

Marshall students who desired a musical course had several possibilities open to them during the school year. The vocal students had the opportunity of joining voice classes offered by Mr. Singleton and Mrs. Stark, while those desiring to play musical instruments were able to become members of either the band or orchestra. Both of these organizations were under the direction of Mr. Geschwind.

Mr. Singleton, director of the Senior Choir, had more than 150 pupils in the choir and in his voice classes. A first-year voice class, a third-year, and two second-year classes composed Mr. Singleton's daily schedule.

THEIR YEN TO BLEND

In the commercial and regular art classes, such projects as the Snow Ball and Students' Association posters were undertaken. Independent work was stressed with the teacher merely advising.

Mechanical drawing students remember their anxious looks as Mr. Kircher judged their plates. From simple fundamentals they advanced to technical drawings. Perhaps the actual constructions have been forgotten, but not the neatness and accuracy acquired in doing them.

Mr. Swanson familiarized his pupils with the fundamentals of welding, forging, and sheet metal and wrought iron work. This course was introduced only last year, and has been greatly appreciated.

CULINARY CUT UPS

Boys as well as girls were taught the art of preparing and serving foods in Mrs. Judson's cooking classes, this year. In training to assume family responsibilities, the classes learned attractive arrangements of tables, selecting and planning of well-balanced diets, and the actual cooking of healthful food. During the year they exhibited many of their different table arrangements and cooked foods.

Miss Pashley's sewing classes gave girls original ideas as well as practical experience in clothing assembly. Running off blouses was quite simple for them as the thread swiftly sped on under their skillfully guided needles. The start of the war signalized the speedy return of buttons to replace zippers.

THEY IMPART THE SMILE OF HEALTH

TOP TO BOTTOM:

Joseph Ulrich, department head, Miss Ruth VanDeWalle, Miss Mary O'Connor, Anthony Gerace, Mrs. Doris Holcombe, Albert Makin

Guided by Mr. Ulrich, the year's work of the health education department was characterized by the stress placed upon introductory first aid. Classes in emergency treatment were given to students of 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th-year levels.

Responding satisfactorily to the course, approximately 200 students, at the end of the introductory lessons, enrolled in the classes held after school hours on Tuesday and Friday.

STOKERFULS of SERVICE GLOW

What makes the wheels go around? Why are the rooms and halls so clean—why is the school so warm in winter? Nine women and seven men, members of the janitorial staff, were responsible.

A night watchman guarded the halls each night — making his rounds alone, by the gleam of his flashlight.

In the daytime, when the building was occupied by hundreds of students, the janitors were kept busy answering their inquiries and keeping the school warm. For this they used 300 tons of coal in the course of the school year.

NERVE CENTER

Bee hives always seemed suggestive of the main office of John Marshall High School during 1941-42. Teachers were seen hurrying into this center of buzzing activity for keys, mail, and news bulletins. Pupils were found at the counter paying for lost books and directing numerous requests at "The Office."

On the staff were Miss Jean Erbeling, Miss Evelyn Lebowitz, and

Mrs. Alice Powell. They kept on the job 38½ hours a week, and the office was open every day except Sundays and holidays. During the summer each received a four-week vacation.

Mrs. Powell, school secretary, was in charge of Mr. Snyder's desk, records, registration, book rentals, all reports, examination

THAT "VICTUAL" INTERVAL

John Marshall high school's kitchen force, headed by Miss Dorothy Andrews, prepared the delicacies served each noon. At the early hour of 7:30 A. M. they were at work on the day's menu. By 10:30 the job was complete. With the help of an electric dishwasher, the dishes took from twenty to twenty-five minutes.

One of the favorite lunches proved to be toasted cheese sandwiches with a thin slice of pickle, and potato chips. Many pupils purchased milk, and ice cream, candy, cookies, cake, or pie.

MARSHALL'S HALLS

by HAROLD BEWICKE

*Marshall's halls see many things:
Pupils running as the bell rings,
Students scrambling—mob-strewn papers,
Cute kids cutting crazy-capers.
They also hear the joyful hurray
As some lucky student gets an "A";
And again there is the lack of glee
When hopes are shattered with an "E."
Tramping feet resound on floors,
Hurrying students slamming doors.
Varied indeed are the many calls
That echo loudly through Marshall's halls.
To finish off, may I please say
That going to Marshall has its pay—
Pay by knowledge—so hard gotten—
And pay by friendships not soon forgotten.*

"A LITTLE GROUP OF WISE HEARTS . . . .

Elections for Executive Council members came this year in November for the first time. Officers then elected served until April. The council was composed of five seniors, five juniors, five sophomores, six freshmen, and four sub-freshmen.

Officers showed the members of the Survey Committee the working of student government during the evaluation February 9 to 11. Because of dissension about joining the Students' Association in February, President Howard Hoesterey called a pep rally one Monday afternoon. Many attended to express their opinions.

Joyce Darron and Ralph Gray were in charge of the Social Committee, which sponsored afternoon dances, a Defense dance, the Snow Ball, and bi-weekly Students' Association dances. Report card ratings and standings occupied the Scholarship Committee, under the direction of Joan Stevens, while the Budget Committee, supervised by John Maggio, untangled Marshall's financial problems.

Members learned to express their opinions clearly and to respect those of others.

IS BETTER THAN A WILDERNESS OF FOOLS"

Comparatively few meetings a term were sufficient for Junior House business this year. Three elections were required, two regular elections in November and April, and one in September for the incoming eighth and ninth graders.

The Junior House was composed of 34 representatives, two from each eighth and ninth grade homeroom. Shyness, which prevailed during the beginning of the year, especially when upperclassmen were present, slowly disappeared.

Under the direction of Marjorie Langbein, president, they planned and presented an assembly for the entire school. They also planned and wrote an issue of the Docket in the spring.

In June, 1941, the council approved a special eighth grade award to be given for 50 scholarship credits and 100 combined athletic and activity credits. It was awarded for the first time this year. The Junior House was indebted to Miss Champney and Mr. Wishart, advisers, who were constantly at the meetings, aiding the officers and giving much of their time to program planning.

"OR LET MY LAMP . . .

During its stay at John Marshall, the Class of '42 won the scholarship cup three times. Jean Banta's success in the ninth year was followed by Howard Hoesterey's in the tenth and Sam Waters' in the eleventh. But they were not without rivals. It was necessary for Sam Waters to earn a perfect rating each report card period in order to surpass his competitors.

The original cup, given to the school by the Class of '22, was engraved with the name of each year's winner and kept in Mr. Burt's office. Since 1938, a cup has been provided each year by the Students' Association so that the winner can retain concrete evidence of his success.

AT MIDNIGHT HOUR . . . .

Mr. DeLong acted as chairman of the Rating Committee during 1941-1942. This committee was composed of two members appointed from each homeroom. One of the two was an active member and the other served as an alternate.

Experimentation last year showed that the process of rating in the homeroom worked more smoothly and efficiently under the direction of a person who was familiar with the system. Mr. DeLong called a meeting of this committee during the early part of September, at which time he explained the new system to his committee. Fortunately, the method did not necessitate having the pupils learn an entirely new method. For the remainder of the year, the members worked independently in their respective homerooms, where they assisted their classmates in figuring their ratings.

The State Education Department made a change in high school graduation requirements, and because of this, Marshall found it necessary to make a corresponding change. Instead of the 320 credits which were previously required, a pupil had to acquire a total of 16 units. One unit represented what was previously counted as 20 credits.

BE SEEN IN SOME . . . .

Under the direction of Mr. Brady, Miss Champney, Mrs. Spencer, Mr. Snyder, and Mr. Wishart comprised the Faculty Scholarship Committee. This year's activities included choosing seniors to become members of the National Honor Society and planning the annual scholarship assembly. This assembly was originated to bring back to Marshall prominent alumni and outstanding members of the business community, in an effort to dramatize the importance of good scholarship in the business world as well as in institutions of higher learning.

The Scholarship Committee chose the pupil who was to receive the scholarship cup. The committee also considered the problem of familiarizing pupils in the school who might be eligible for scholarships with colleges presenting them. The year's most important activity was the further study of methods to aid specially-gifted pupils, particularly with special classes to allow them to progress at their own rate.

HIGH LONELY TOWER"

Last year the John Marshall chapter of the National Honor Society reappeared after a three-year lapse of activity. Under a special scholarship committee, advised by Mr. Brady, a constitution was drawn up with an objective basis for the annual selection of the Society's members.

At the beginning of this year, 35 seniors were elected into the society by the National Honor Society Council. This council was made up of Mr. Snyder, chairman, Mrs. Spencer, Miss Champney, Mr. Burt, Mr. Brady, and Mr. Wishart, advisers. Active members could be dropped whenever laxity in scholarship became apparent.

To be eligible for membership, a pupil had to attain a rating of at least 7.8 with an average of 50 athletic or activity credits or a combination of the two per year. Twelfth graders were admitted with a 7.0 rating if they had 100 participation credits. Members must have attended Marshall for one year and been at the eleventh or twelfth grade level. Graduate members of the society were not permitted to vote.

The purpose of the Honor Society was to develop enthusiasm for high scholarship, good leadership, sound character, and service to the school. Among its members, the society was harboring future members of the college society, Phi Beta Kappa, a society for outstanding scholarship and into which several Marshall graduates have been admitted.

Six-page issues of the Docket became common and highlighted the Docket's achievements for the year. This idea originated last spring when the girls' issue of the Docket appeared with six pages. When carried over to this year, the idea worked better than had been anticipated, and the junior journalists had no difficulty in providing enough copy.

An associate editor later had to be added to the growing staff. A new system of copy fitting eliminated the counting of words. Twenty-one Marshall journalists attended the Syracuse E. S. S. P. A. Convention held in October to foster good journalism in New York State. Editors will remember the time a few journalists started eating their lunches in the Docket office. Mr. Miller explained that mice congregate where crumbs are left. This thought must have changed their minds, for no lunches were seen after that.

Consequences of signing a document without reading it carefully will long be remembered by the junior journalists. So will the apple-cart, which proved the honesty of most Marshallites and perhaps of all the school journalists.

One never heard of a press bureau office, a press bureau class, or a press bureau editor in Marshall. It was all Docket this and Docket that—yet working in the shadow of the well-known publication, the less prominent publicity staff accomplished its equally important task month in and month out.

This past year saw a decided change in the press bureau set-up from last year. One editor-in-chief, Marilyn Heeder, and one copy reader, Glorya Keemer, composed the team. Last year two co-editors-in-chief and two copy editors rotated weekly. Thus Marilyn and Glorya had a doubly hard task in editing copy and bearing the trials of the junior journalists.

In 103, press bureau and Docket reporters sat side by side, sharing new tips—once in a while. In the Docket office, publication staff members shared Mr. Miller's specially-for-staff-members apples, with the responsibility of the glass "honor" bank.

When pupils swelled with pride upon recognizing their names in the Democrat and Chronicle or Tenth Ward Courier it was through the hard-working publicity staff that their egos were satisfied.

FROM HISTORY'S HEARTH OUR YARN UNFOLDS

Work on the 1942 John Quill began last June, earlier than ever before in its history. A "time table" informing editors of the deadline for certain tasks was used. A handbook, detailing each editor's duties, also made its debut.

Hours of research on pictures, days spent preparing the dummy, and weeks of picture-taking occupied staff members. Junior and senior journalists wrote articles for over one hundred pictures taken by the camera committee.

An advisory board of Miss Foley, Mrs. Spencer, and Mr. Brady, approved the publication's budget and assisted the editors in planning a theme. Several stories were rewritten to conform with it.

The 1942 John Quill staff has, in the opinion of Mr. Miller, general adviser, set a new high in publishing a yearbook practically and systematically. The editors planned page layouts with imagination, especially the inexpensive method of varying senior pages.

CREATIVE SPARKS AT LENGTH AGLOW

"Hey, wait a moment! How can the butler murder his widow's sister? Nope, can't use that one—not even the printer would believe it!" And another literary "masterpiece" is callously consigned to the wastebasket.

And thus, rallying bravely through the fires of criticism and the editors' red marks, John Marshall's literary magazine slowly gathered shape. Student contributions urged on by anxious literary editors, poured in, went through the relentless editorial slaughter, and staggered into publication some ten weeks later.

Though many an editorial conference ended in a good bull-session, the end of the year proved Sam Waters an able and efficient editor-in-chief, with John Henry, managing editor, and Glorvra Keemer, associate editor, irreplaceable first lieutenants. Dorothy Coakley handled the literary contributions, while Janet Gay, as feature editor, struggled to create an unusual feature section for the magazine.

IN THE BALANCE

Handling nearly $18,000 kept Mr. Brady, later replaced by Mr. DeLong, busy during the year. Since nearly all was spent, Marshall had only $300 left in the bank.

Raising over $900, the Students' Association was aided by the student book store, which earned $600. The Students' Association used $500 for supplying assemblies, uniforms, and other items. Totalling $500, the Docket provided the biggest expense of the year. Miscellaneous items such as the Memorial Day wreath and health education equipment took up the surplus.

Mr. Snyder, the Executive Council, and faculty advisers are the only persons able to authorize expenditures. To trace the financial system, an actual case will be described. To obtain an orchestra, it was necessary for the Snowball chairman to make a request blank. When the orchestra submitted its bill, it was approved and sent it to Mr. Brady, school treasurer, who checked and ratified it. The bill was then sent to the main office where Mr. Snyder, or in some cases Mr. Burt or Mrs. Spencer, and Mrs. Powell, office secretary, signed a check for the amount.

If a purchase was necessary, the purchaser filled out three identical requisition blanks. Mr. Brady kept one, the office a second, and the purchaser the third. Three order blanks were also made out. Mr. Brady, the purchaser, and Mr. Tennity each received one. By these methods, Marshall had a triple check that the order sent agreed with the request made by the person desiring the material. Since no one person can put money in the bank and withdraw it, Marshall has a safeguard against embezzling.

All sales managers sent their daily collections to the banking office, where Mr. Thayer and his assistants checked and recorded them. Next the money was placed in the office and the depositor received a receipt. The office retained a duplicate.

John Maggio, student treasurer, counted and deposited the money in the bank, bringing back a receipt. Every receipt Marshall has ever received from the bank is filed in Mr. Brady's office. Each month the amount in the bank was checked with the amount stated in the cash book.

Norma Plummer, Mr. Brady's student secretary, helped with orders and requisitions. Adeline Shirka kept a check on the cash book and assisted Norma.

Counting and accounting for Marshall's currency kept Mary Teboe and John Maggio busily occupied throughout 1941-42.

Norma Plummer, acting as student secretary to Mr. Brady, spent a large amount of time filing requisition blanks and checks.

IN UNITY OUR STRENGTH EVALUES

Teaching sociability and usefulness in the school and community was the main purpose of the Girls' Service Organization. The G. S. O. offered many clubs to its members, which included all the girls in the school. All clubs worked together to plan the annual girls' Christmas assembly on December 18.

In the Big Sister Club, advised by Miss Paine, 131 junior girls "adopted" eighth graders. Girl guides, under Mrs. Spencer, volunteered services for greeting and directing visitors through the building. They ushered at plays and special assemblies. Mrs. Pease, assisted by Mrs. Corbett, advised the Career Club. A trip through the Times-Union and addresses on vocations were among its highlights.

Mrs. Judson directed members of the Hostess Club, who learned to be gracious hostesses by serving at social affairs in school.

Junior Aide Club, with Miss Powers advising, met every Wednesday afternoon in room 231 to fold and wrap bandages. Some of these girls spent Saturday mornings at Strong Memorial Hospital, also Miss Grinnell was in charge of the Library Club. Its members volunteered, during study hall period, to help in the library. Their objective was to learn more about libraries and books. The Girls' Welfare Corps met the first Tuesday of each month with Mrs. Jones.

THE PIPES OF PAN HELD COURT

Stepping into the spotlight at four football games, the band marshaled 48 members this year. Two of the four appearances were at night games. Many band members, clad in light sweaters, shivered in the cold, November air. Greatly improved formation performances received hearty acclaim from enthusiastic crowds. The members met sixth period every Wednesday and Friday in room 403 for practice.

The orchestra, consisting of 63 members, greatly enjoyed playing such numbers as "Rienzi" by Richard Wagner and "The Song of the Flame" by George Gerschwin.

Four members of the orchestra formed a string quartet which performed successfully on three separate occasions under the direction of Mr. Geschwind. They were: William Munroe, first violinist; Sidney Jones, second violinist; Caroline Ashmead, viola; Violet Corcoran, cellist; Joyce Strickland, string bass, who sometimes made a fifth. The orchestra performed at a joint assembly program with the band.

"It Seemed the Harmonious Echo . . . .

Turkey dinners and a candlelight procession at Sibley's climaxed the year's activities of the Senior Choir. Singing at the Civics Exhibit Building, the semi-annual assemblies, the Thanksgiving assembly, at Number 34 School, and Marshall Night at Number 7 School composed the rest of its varied activities.

This year the choir gave numerous fine performances despite the comparatively small enrollment of 92. In previous years the choir contained over 125 members.

Fifteen of Marshall's vocalists were among those chosen for Inter-High Choir. This group took part in the Christmas Concert at the Eastman Theater.

Streamlined renditions of old favorites such as "Three Blind Mice" figured in the five performances given by the Junior Choir directed by Mrs. Stark.

The eighth grade section met on Monday, while the freshmen met on Tuesday.

On Wednesday the full choir assembled. Twelve choristers were members of the Inter-High Junior Choir.

President of the eighth grade section was Helen Doerfler, with Wesley Becker as vice-president; Beverly Kier and Phil Elliot were secretaries. Virginia Boucquaert presided over the ninth graders, assisted by Jean Feist, vice-president; Robert Scrimgeour and Raymond Murphy, secretaries; and William Reid was librarian for both groups, assisted by Kenneth White.

Favorites of the group were "The Shadow March" by Protheroe and "The Streamlined Version of Three Blind Mice," arranged by Aschenbrenner.

From Our Discordant Life"

"I'll read it to you . . ."

"How much are you depositing?"

"Just one ticket?"

PUPIL POTENTATES

Some of the homeroom presidents were elected by their classmates because of their popularity, scholarship record, or because of their proficiency on the football field or basketball court. On the whole, the homeroom teachers reported that the presidents of their homerooms were elected on the basis of all three qualities.

The homeroom president had his duties just as any officer in any democracy does. There were 47 homeroom presidents, who presided over the homerooms and had functions somewhat like the governor of a state. Organizing homeroom teams, promoting such school projects as the Students' Memorial Scholarship Fund, and taking attendance in some cases were among functions of this executive. It was the duty of this officer to place all matters pertaining to homeroom affairs before that body and see them through.

Teachers and pupils both agree that the training received in this position is of value to leaders of tomorrow. It is also very valuable to the followers, for they will know why orders are given and the best possible way of carrying them to the most successful end.

FUTURE FORESEERS

Every Monday morning students were met with this query, "Who wants to bank today?" The inquirer was the faithful homeroom bank clerk, ready to receive deposits from thrifty students.

The bank clerk's duty was not easy. He had to know how to add, which isn't a joke; to write, for the names must be absolutely legible; and he had to do his homework the night before, since he had no time for it during the homeroom period.

Because of the national emergency, defense stamps were sold throughout the school year with very favorable response from the student body. The stamps were safely kept at the bank for those students who banked through the homeroom bank clerk.

Stamps were also on sale every morning at the banking office for pupils who wished to keep them in their own books. Shirley Berner, Betty Brundage, Elizabeth Evans, Barbara Masseth, and Geraldine Rayment were the tellers who collected the money at the banking office and kept records of all money banked.

Until January 1, 1942, the students had purchased $513.80 worth of defense stamps and had banked $970.00 through the school banking office.

PLUCKY PROMOTERS

With a mighty war whoop, Marshall's Indian Campaign, conducted for its premiere performance by a student—"Big Chief" Jack de Vries, reached the record-breaking percentage of 96.6. Who helped Jack to boost that percentage? The hard working sales managers, of course.

Who was behind the first night basketball game, which resulted in a Marshall victory over East Rochester? Again, the credit was given the sales managers, who sold the tickets to members of the cheering section.

December 6 came with 140 couples swinging and swaying to the music of Joe Cady's Orchestra at the annual Snowball. Another achievement in which sales managers played an important part. Also included in their duties was the Defense Stamp Campaign, which brought in a total of $740 in stamps.

THEY BRAVE ALL BEDLAM THAT ENSUES

"Hey, cross on the crosswalk over there!" In such a manner one more wandering student was guided by a member of the John Marshall Traffic Patrol to cross the street on the crosswalk. This familiar incident could have taken place, as it often did, any time between September and June. Even the worst day of winter found a member of the squad faithfully standing at his post in his usual cheery mood.

Captain John Evans and his eleven husky co-workers served in the parking lot where they fought winter's fury by helping the occupants of ice-and-snow-bound cars. In the bicycle room, they helped Marshall's numerous cyclists to put their bikes in the racks provided for them. For the greater number of Marshallites, school came to a long-awaited close when the bell rang at 2:42, but the squad members were happy to see 2:50, since it meant that their day on the traffic squad was over.

After the performance of the play, "Sparkin," at Marshall, the set was dismantled and transported to Eastman Kodak Company, where another performance was enacted. Then back to Marshall came the set for further use. Such was the type of work done by the stage crew.

Serving as make-up artists, acting as prompters, and helping to decorate the gym for school dances also were jobs done by the stage crew.

TRY HIGH WISE

The Hi-Y pledge—"To create, maintain, and extend, throughout the school and community, high standards of Christian character"—took on renewed significance in this time of international conflict. Beta, Delta, and Gamma—Marshall's Hi-Y's gave their support to America's defense by offering their services to the Red Cross.

Thomas Porcari piloted Beta Hi-Y the first term. Assisting him were Frank Gillette, vice-president; Donald Aldinger, secretary; and John Yates, treasurer. During the second term, Jack de Vries presided. Dudley Matthews was vice-president; Sidney Jones, secretary, and John Yates, treasurer. Mr. Landis was adviser.

Guiding Delta through the first semester was Wilson Powers, assisted by Robert Curtis, Raymond Rissler and Richard Cavall, who were vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, respectively. Mr. Hunter helped the club. The second term Wilson Powers was president; Jack Fields, vice-president; Richard Cavall, secretary; and Richard Van Saun, treasurer.

Among the constructive programs undertaken by Delta was a trip to the Investigation Bureau, where members were fingerprinted; and visits to station WHAM, the Democrat and Chronicle and the Times-Union. Two Delta delegates attended the state Hi-Y convention at Albany, where students took over the state Capitol and introduced bills for legislation. A book and magazine campaign for soldiers was inaugurated by Delta.

Don Martin presided at the meeting of Gamma Hi-Y during the first semester. Other officers were: vice-president, Robert Kesselring; secretary, Ferdinand Van Branteghem; and treasurer, Harrison Guenther. The second term found Ferdinand Van Branteghem as president; Gordon Allardice, vice-president; William Morgan, secretary; and William Cowan, treasurer.

A forum on "Clothes" was supervised by Gamma. In the fall, Gamma and Delta sponsored a hay ride. Later Mr. Fotch and Mr. Eike debated the topic, "Should America Enter the War?"

A bulletin called, "Hi-Y in War Time" was distributed to each club. It gave suggestions on what Hi-Y's might do in the emergency.

With shiny noses and pert, bobbing pigtaails, 1941's rushees bowed in salutation to their Tri-Y "elder." Alpha, Beta, Delta, and Sigma comprised the Tri-Y's at Marshall.

Much frivolity, seasoned with servitude, came after the Alpha Tri-Y initiation. Dinners, teas, dances, discussions of teen-age problems with Beta Hi-Y, and a Christmas party for needy children kept them busy. A highlight of the year was the "World Fellowship" banquet attended by Marshall Tri-Y's. Cooperating with Beta Hi-Y, Alpha sponsored a Red Cross Dance.

Handling the gavel the first term was Betty Speltz, with Marilyn Heeder, vice-president; Hazel Fyfe, secretary; Patricia Fillius, treasurer; Joyce Darron, corresponding secretary; and Helen Spain, social chairman. The second term officers were Marilyn Heeder, president; Shirley Roller, vice-president; Patricia Fillius, secretary; Virginia Drumheller, treasurer; Marilyn Kennedy, publicity; Lucille Johnson and Sally Dunn, social chairmen.

Hallowe'en dancing introduced rushees into Beta Tri-Y, formerly the "Junior Girl Reserves." Splash parties, dinners, and speakers followed. In order to obtain Tri-Y sweaters, the Beta enrollees sold candy, doughnuts, and cider.

June Pearson occupied the president's chair with Nancy Lee as vice-president; Katherine Grossman, secretary; and Betty Kilmer, custodian of the currency.

A roller-skating party followed by a pot-luck supper started Delta's season. The main event was a candlelight service with Sigma and a sleigh ride.

Delta's presiding officers for the first term were: president, Anna Wess, and vice-president, Marian Williams. Arlene Thompson was secretary; Sybil Rawlings, social chairman; Margaret Jones, attendance officer; and Leona Barry in charge of penalties.

BIGWIGS PARLEY

Leading the Marshall team in the capacity of captains were Glen Ramsay and Jim McElheny, chosen by the members of the football team. Glen's play at center was inspiring and consistent throughout the season while Jim was devoted to the ball totting chores.

Three boys attained all-scholastic rating. Jim McElheny acclaimed the best "all-round" back in the league, was selected all-city quarterback. George Haslip, one of the league's outstanding linemen, won a tackle berth. Hard-tackling Jim Roth was all-scholastic left end and his left-footed punting was immeasurable in Marshall's success.

THROUGH WIND AND STORM UNDAUNTED

Finishing third in the interscholastic race, Marshall's 1941 football aggregation ended a successful grid campaign with a record of five wins against two defeats.

Coach Makin made a great success of his first all-Marshall outfit, with three regulars being accorded all-scholastic honors. Well drilled in fundamentals, the warriors showed fine blocking and hard-charging defensive tactics.

Marshall's seasonal debut was a smashing 14-0 victory over Charlotte. Following the season's opener, important victories over Edison, Franklin, Madison, and West placed the team on top.

In the feature clash of the season, the slightly favored Marshall eleven was dropped from the unbeaten ranks by a classy Jefferson team which pushed over a single touchdown to win 6-0. Playing on a wet, slippery field, the Marshall offense was unable to function effectively in the face of the hard-charging Jeff forward wall.

The final encounter of the season pitted Marshall against undefeated but twice-tied Monroe. Marshall's once-shattering ground attack and unyielding defense were sadly lacking from the field when the team took a 40-0 shellacking.

LEATHER BOUNCERS

John Marshall's 1941 soccer team finished the fall season with a record of two wins and six defeats. Coach Gerace had the task of molding a smooth-working combination around five veterans of last year's squad; Fred Ayers, Dudley Matthews, Jack Norton, Bruce Unwin, and Robert Wetzel. Newcomers proved their ability by forming a scrappy, clean-playing squad with a "never-say-die" attitude.

Their efforts were rewarded as they captured the last two contests. In the Edison encounter, the Orange and Blue booters came off the rain-soaked field with a 10 to 4 verdict. Again they proved victorious as they won by the score of 10 to 2 over East's Orientals in the season's finale.

A change in previous scoring methods was invoked by the Interscholastic Soccer League this year. Previously field goals and penalty kicks were scored as one point each. Due to the large number of tie games, this was changed with other field rulings to make it easier to run up a high score. Two points were awarded for a field goal and the same reward was given for a successful penalty kick.

Although they started the season late, the Marshall players felt they had received something tangible from the sport of soccer. They developed high moral courage and fine team spirit. New friendships through team play were also gained.

NON-STOP FLIGHT

"Take it easy, boys. Don't do more than three miles; I wouldn't want you to get tired," remarked Mr. Howe on several occasions as the cross country team participated in pre-season practice. In this manner the team put itself into shape for its contests. Exercise was based on a progressive system; at the start each boy ran a quarter of a mile but increased this gradually until he was running three miles a night.

John Marshall's 1941 cross-country team wound up in seventh place in the interscholastic league. Its ten points were gained by taking two second and two third-place spots. This year's team was one place higher than last year's.

In the annual post-season meet at Geneva, Frank Gillette was among the first 15, placing 14th out of 116 entries. Each Rochester high school entered its top seven men to compete against runners from other schools. The members of the fall cross-country team are usually the backbone of the spring track team.

A TISKET A TASKET

Playing inspiring ball for the greater part of the season, Marshall's '41-'42 court contingent, however, suffered a few lapses, losing the chance for a higher standing in the scholastic league. A record of eight wins against five setbacks was good for fifth place for the hard-working Nugent-men.

Sparked by Captain "Ted" Hagerman, quick-moving guard, the Marshall five displayed a versatile attack together with a closely-knit zone defense.

Others outstanding in the Marshall quintet were "Wally" Cockburn, colorful forward who furnished some amazingly accurate one-handed shooting; and Jim Roth, rangy center who also came through with high-scoring performances.

The team from Ridgeway opened the season by downing East Rochester 32-24, in a non-league tilt. Marshall dropped the first league encounter to a tall West High team by the score of 34-10, but rallied to two victories over Madison and Jefferson. After dropping a league verdict to Edison, Marshall avenged its defeat by Tech by copping consecutive non-league victories from Edison and East Rochester.

Of the remaining nine games, Marshall was victorious in six, the three defeats coming at the hands of Franklin, eventual titlists, West and Monroe in the season finale.

SUPER SURVIVORS

Presenting Marshall the first city championship swimming team in its history, Coach Gerace's squad of 1941-42 splashed through the season undefeated in city competition. Marshall too was victorious in the Section V championship meet in the U. of R. pool without any firsts in the individual events.

Opening the season by a 59-7 victory over Madison, the mermen surged past Franklin and West by scores of 47-19 and 41-25. Swimming in the home pool, Marshall eked out a 35-31 decision over second place Edison. Jefferson and Charlotte were the next;

Monroe's Redjackets succumbed 47-19 for Orange and Blue's seventh straight victory.

In the final contest of the season a fighting second place East squad dropped a 45-21 verdict to Marshall. Though gaining six of eight possible firsts, the new champs were pressed in all events by the Orientals.

Chalking up 20 victories over two seasons, "Skip" Page remained undefeated in the breast-stroke. Also an unofficial diving mark of 93.4 was recorded by Page during the Edison meet.

ON A HIT-AND-RUN BASIS

John Marshall's 1941 baseball nine played through a rather disastrous season, salvaging only three victories out of an eight game schedule. Inexperience proved to be the greatest handicap to the promising but green material that composed the team of Coach Clippinger.

Although the batting was noticeably weak, there were a few instances when the Ridgeway boys showed great potentiality at the plate. Marshall had a field day against Monroe, led by Second Baseman Jimmy Gudgell, and the team pounded out 12 hits in a 9-5 conquest over the Monroe team.

In the traditional battle with their arch-rivals, Charlotte, the Orange and Blue nine again exploded with a decisive barrage of base knocks. Don Stollery had a perfect day as Marshall collected ten hits in downing the Lakesiders, 13-1.

Pre-season training led to the prediction that Marshall would in all probability have a well-balanced pitching staff. Without consistent support at the plate, however, the fine hurling of Bill Gerhardt, "Chuck" Starwald, and Bob Vandenberg was of little avail against the superior offensive powers. Vandenberg received the credit for two of the Orange and Blue victories, both the Charlotte and Monroe encounters, while Gerhardt was the winning pitcher over West in the third game of the season.

SPRING'S PERENNIAL RUNAROUND

Taking an easy second place in the Interscholastic League, John Marshall's 1941 track team showed great efficiency and skill. A great factor in the success of this team was the presence of Vincent Seguin and Howard Coster, city champions in the half-mile run and the hurdling event, respectively.

Of its 24 members 12 were veterans of Marshall's 1940 team. With these members as a focal point and with all engaged in diligent practice throughout the season, Coach Makin molded a smooth-working team feared by all who opposed it, one which could be counted on for a good showing, no matter who the opponent.

Edison Tech, the 1941 champion, was the only school to defeat the Marshall team. This was accomplished by piling up a total of 49 points to Marshall's 35½ points.

HEADS UP!

Meeting every Thursday afternoon in the girls' gym, 24 girls, whom Miss VanDeWalle had admitted into the Girls' Leaders' Club during the first term, gained extremely valuable experience. When Miss VanDeWalle became an instructor of first aid during the second semester, Miss O'Connor took over her duties.

Girls, in this organization, took the attendance, tested their green-clad classmates in their gym classes, assisted in many after-school activities, and assumed numerous other positions of responsibility which afforded them definite possibilities for further training.

Only the girls who had good athletic ability and a genuine interest in physical education were allowed to become members of the club. Student manager of the club during the first term was Jane Griffiths. Ruth White managed the club during the second semester.

Dressed and ready for the occasion, the girls are prepared to start on a hike in the cold, crisp, winter air

RUBBER RETREADS

Priority boards did not bother 22 girls who, under the direction of Mrs. Holcombe, composed the Girls' Hiking Club; for they used neither automobiles nor gasoline. During the gasoline shortage their defense motto was, "We don't waste gas!" They were not wearing away precious rubber tires by driving aimlessly around the country side.

The girls met directly after school on Tuesdays for their weekly hike through familiar Seneca or Maplewood Park. Like the ever-heroic mailmen, they were not daunted by summer's blistering heat, autumn's biting cold, winter's icy sleet, or spring's balmy breezes. That is, hardly ever.

After a great deal of laborious preparation, pertinent and usual indecision, the girls prepared a sumptuous outdoor repast which they easily consumed on one of their outdoor hikes without hesitation or difficulty.

KEEP 'EM FLOATIN'

Envisioning themselves as future Eleanor Holmes, athletically-inclined girls were willing to undergo the temporary inconvenience of wet hair, shiny noses, and reddened eyes for the painless permanence of aquatic aptitude, svelte midriiffs, or if these be out of reach, . . . the compensation of mastering the more difficult strokes.

A realization that practice makes perfect prompted the girls to turn out en masse every Wednesday and Friday afternoon for an hour's instruction under Miss O'Connor. Thirty minutes of the hour was spent in aquatic gymnastics. Following this, the mermaids splashed, dived and swam to their heart's content.

In the spring, interest centered on the climactic swimming meet, held annually to promote the physical education department's "Learn-to-swim-well" campaign. As a result, many girls proudly toted certificates for many days thereafter attesting to their aquatic prowess.

THE GENTLE ART OF CANVASSING

Under the expert and experienced tutelage of Mr. Schantz, the 33 male members of the John Marshall boxing club, the first in the school's history, enjoyed a very favorable season. The boxers held their sessions in the boys' individual health training room, off the boys gym, on Wednesday nights.

The fundamentals of boxing were taught during the first part of the meeting, while the second part of the meeting was used as a free period, in which the boys were engaged in actual practice. It was during this free period that the boys acquired experience by applying their recently-gained knowledge. Also, at this time three-round bouts were staged.

The equipment worn by the punchers consisted of football helmets and hand bandages. Boxing gloves were also included with their needs. These ranged in weight from 12 to 16 ounces.

SPARROWS DISCREETLY BEWARE

Every Friday afternoon, 33 Marshall lassies were seen in the small gymnasium struggling to connect with the "birdie" in that often-exasperating sport of badminton. Under the instructions of Mrs. Holcombe, most of them acquired quite a proficiency at the game.

Enthusiastic response to this ever-popular sport was evident in the high attendance of the girls participating. With the stress on health during the national emergency, badminton became a valuable means of keeping in the "pink" of condition. The keen competition of badminton provided fun and excitement for these health-minded femmes.

RACQUET

The Wright racquet eers finished fourth in interscholastic competition last spring. In the sectionals the Culley and Altman doubles team proved victorious in the quarter-finals, but they were defeated in the semi-finals. Culley was the Marshall champion.

In the spring term of 1942, the squad was formed around Veterans Dick Altman, Sheldon Boyd, and Fred Pomeroy.

AGILE PADDLEMATES

Paddling their cares away every Thursday afternoon, between 65 and 70 feminine ping-pong enthusiasts participated in one of the most popular girls' activities in Marshall. Ping pong demands a keen eye and good coordination.

During the first semester, the class was run on a tournament basis. Each participant played at least 35 other girls. In the championship playoffs, Marjorie Whitehouse proved to be the "cream of the crop" by defeating all other candidates. Vida Ingerick was runner-up to the champion. The tournament idea, however, was abandoned during the second semester and the club ran on a social and athletic basis.

KEGLER PRETTIES

The clatter of pins was not the only sound heard when the girl keglers of John Marshall High School bowled at the Ridge Alleys every Tuesday afternoon. Miss Van-DeWalle had charge of the club with the assistance of Helen Kuhman, who acted as student manager.

Thirty athletic credits were given to each girl who attended regularly for a ten-week period. To receive these credits, it was necessary to bowl at least one game a week. Girls were not restricted to this number, however, but had to pay 20 cents for each game.

Three of the top-ranking bowlerettes were Helen Kuhman with 122; Shirley Roller, 117; and Ruth Herbstrommer, 106.

Grace Vick and team mates

SPARE ME

Strong arms and keen eyesight are but a few of the more important qualifications which are necessary to be a member of the John Marshall bowling squad. Although the team this year had a rather unsuccessful season, the experience gained was valuable to many of the boys. The slump in the club this season was attributed to the lack of support for the players and interest in this sport.

ARROWS FLEW LIKE HAIL

Approximately 30 would-be Robin Hoods turned out for archery practice this year. They met weekly in the large gym during the spring and fall terms. Correct shooting form, which is essential for accuracy, and a good score were especially emphasized by Mr. Goetz, adviser of the club.

The formation of a six-man team was considered; however it was impractical since only two other Rochester high schools participated in this sport.

By charging a weekly fee of ten cents the club bought three targets, 50 arrows, and a complete set of archery tackle. Most of this was produced by the art craft shop, also under the direction of Mr. Goetz.

Pupils who wanted to carry solo burdens both in and out of school were eligible for these classes. Everyone earned the opportunity to sing a solo at the voice classes' annual recitals in March.

Eighth grade classes of Mrs. Stark had an entirely new course of study to follow last year. The aim of this revised course emphasized the fact that music is usually centered around an idea. The latter half of the course included an imaginary trip to an opera.

Outside of having all the eighth graders, Mrs. Stark taught a first-year class and also the Junior Choir. This latter group contained between 145 and 150 members.

From 12:30 to 3:00 P. M., Miss Erbelding worked on the switch board. She took dictation from Mr. Snyder, and had charge of the Students' Memorial Scholarship Fund, non-resident tuition, registration, class ranking, test records, participation records, and the mail chute.

Mr. Burt's dictation was taken by Miss Lebowitz, who also did mimeograph work and handled telephone calls. Attendance, transfers, and requests at the counter fell under her supervision.

Everything from small pocket books to complicated wood carvings resulted from the year's training in Mr. Goetz's art craft classes. Working with their hands introduced new hobbies and increased the skill of pupils in others.

To violate the "Keep Out" sign on Mr. Sullivan's developing room meant danger. Throughout the year classes were busy on regular pictures as well as those for the John Quill and Docket.

Munchers' Monitors

Placing chairs in their proper positions, picking up waste paper, and taking care of the stairways and lights were the main duties performed by the luncheon patrol. Miss Paine, adviser of the 27 members of the patrol, was aided by Bettie Aab, captain of the girls, and Robert Sachs, who was in charge of the boys. Cooperation of the entire student body was vitally necessary to keep the lunchroom really neat and clean. Only pupils who had vacant fourth periods were eligible for the group.

Dark Eyes

Showing from 20 to 30 miles of film a year was no easy task, but the Visual Service Club, under the direction of Mr. Swanson, accomplished that and more. The student president of the group was Thomas Porcari with Jean Gibbin secretary.

When anything went wrong with the machines, the club's chief repairmen, Don Durbin and John Evans were immediately called upon to rejuvenate them. This, however, didn't happen very often, for the members of the club were well versed in the operation of all the machines. These included two silent machines, one sound machine, and one slide projector.

Among its 32 members were capable student instructors: Dick Altman, Rolf Eichler, Stanley Hart, Edwin Lusink, and Robert Maurinus. The activities of this club included many outside features. Probably the most important of these activities was a visit to the projection room of one of the large downtown theaters.

Careful - Courteous - Service

Uncounted hours went into the preparation of this John Quill—uncounted hours spent by editors, committee members and advisers. Scarcely anyone who has not been intimately connected with such a book realizes the number of processes involved, the variety of talents required, or the thousands of details which must be disposed of one by one.

It begins with gathering data and preparing write-ups that are as accurate, as complete, and as well proportioned as possible. It includes taking pictures that must be well composed, skillfully lighted, accurately timed, properly developed and, finally, printed correctly on any one of a dozen grades of paper. All the phases of editing from the first sketch of each layout, to the final editing of picture and copy to fit that layout, is always a process requiring skill, artistic judgment, executive ability, and precision.

Because of all these facts and many more, it seems more than appropriate that the coordinator of all these activities violate the modesty of editors and advisers to the extent of pointing out that they have performed their duties in a highly praiseworthy manner.

Almost every phase has gone more smoothly than ever. Deadlines have been met and nearly all editors have handled their responsibility with a dependability and skill which is well above average for high school yearbooks. High individual praise could be bestowed upon Phyllis Johnson, Fred Grossman, and the three indefatigable copy editors, because their duties lasted weeks longer and hours later day after day. To single them out as super-performers, however, would be misleading because Glenna Vardy, Kenneth Burke and several others also deserve superlative praise for their part for the 1942 John Quill. It is fine teamwork on the part of everybody concerned which alone makes this book possible.
